Students sharing experiences, views on global education

Every year, students come to Hope College from many countries around the world, and every year a number of Hope College students study abroad. The Alliance for Cultural and Ethnic Harmony (ACEH) will meet at 7 p.m. Friday to hear some of these students discuss "Reflections on Global Education: A Student Perspective on Studying in the U.S. and Abroad."

The meeting, which is open to the public, will be at the Martha Miller Center at the intersection of 10th Street and Columbia Avenue. Refreshments will be served.

Amy Otis-De Grau, director of the Fried International Center at Hope, has organized a panel of three international students and three students who have returned from study-abroad courses.

ACEH was founded in Holland in 1999 as a grass-roots organization to work for cross-cultural understanding, justice, equal opportunity and appreciation for diversity.
